In the years following British colonisation of Australia, Aboriginal trackers were enlisted by Europeans to assist them in exploring the Australian landscape. The trackers' excellent tracking skills were advantageous to settlers in finding food and water and locating missing persons, capturing bushrangers and violently 'dispersing' other groups of Indigenous peoples.

Here are some suggestions: Start by removing all food sources such as bowls of pet food and don't overlook the bird seed dispensers. These seem like a harmless thing to have in the yard but the coyote can smell the bird food and will even consume those seeds that drop to the ground but more importantly, squirrels, rats and mice will eat the seeds and then the coyote will smell the rodents ...
